Thomas Hardcastle (1636-1678) pastored the Church of Christ in Broadmead at Bristol, England, for seven years from 1671 until his death in 1678. This church began as an Independent congregation sometime in 1640. When it became identified as a Baptist church is unknown, although the church in the early 1650s discussed the necessity of baptism after a profession of faith, and by 1670, most of the members had been baptized on their professions of faith. (1) During Hardcastle's pastorate at Bristol, he spent two six-month prison terms in Newgate Prison for preaching at illegal worship services. Hardcastle was no stranger to prison, having been arrested at least five times before arriving in Bristol. Sometime in 1668 or 1669, after being imprisoned fifteen months in Chester Castle, he moved to London, was baptized, and became a member of Particular Baptist church worshipping in Swan Alley (London).
